An old Boeing 727 aeroplane might not be most people's idea of home, but to Bruce Campbell that is exactly what it has become. The retired electrical engineer from Oregon, USA, who has a passion for aircraft, has spent over $200,000 creating a rather special home for himself.

2 _____

What he did was buy a retired Boeing 727, which he then took apart. Next, he had the pieces transported to a ten-acre plot of land he already owned on the outskirts of Portland and rebuilt the aeroplane in the woods.

3 _____

Creating this unique home has been a slow process and so far has taken over fifteen years but Bruce is careful to reuse as much as he can of the old aeroplane. He has turned the cockpit* into his reading room, made one of the bathrooms usable again, put in a temporary shower and added a clear floor so that you can see the original structure of the plane. His unusual home also contains a sleeping area and a workable kitchen.

4 _____

At present Bruce lives in his aeroplane for six months of the year and spends the other six in Japan. As well as finishing the Portland plane project, he also has another idea that he is considering for the future: to buy another retired aeroplane and create a second home in Japan.

5 _____

So why is Bruce so keen on converting*² disused aeroplanes into homes? He says there are many reasons but that retired airliners are strong, well designed, secure and made out of materials that will last. They also make an interesting and unusual home and are fun to live in.

6 _____

Perhaps in the future, as more and more aeroplanes are retired around the world, other people will copy his ideas. At least in this way, the aeroplanes would not become waste and would instead be re-used in a way which has a positive impact on both the environment and the people who decide to make them home.

* the front part of the aeroplane from which the pilot controls the aeroplane

*² changing the structure and function of Reading

11 Read the article. Look at the sentences on the next page and write true (T) or false (F).

Dr Maggie Aderin-Pocock, Space Scientist

Born to Nigerian parents in London, my journey to success as a space scientist has not been easy. When I was young, I was moved around a lot because of family problems and ended up going to a total of thirteen different schools. I was also discovered to be dyslexic* and was often placed in the remedial classes*² as a result. Although I had dreams and ambitions for my future from an early age, when I told teachers that I wanted to become an astronaut and go to the Moon I was encouraged instead to go into nursing, a career which they considered to be more suitable for me.

Fortunately my family, especially my father, gave me a lot of real support and encouraged me to follow my dreams. Without this I may never have succeeded in leaving school with high grades in A-level maths, physics, chemistry and biology. These results made it possible for me to then face the challenge of doing a physics degree at Imperial College London, which I completed in 1990. After which, I went on to gain a PhD in mechanical engineering.

My career in space science has, over the years, given me opportunities to work on a wide range of exciting projects around the world and I have now become one of the presenters of The Sky at Night, which is a TV programme about astronomy*³. Although I enjoy all the elements of my current work, I am now also keen to encourage more children, particularly girls, into science. It remains a very male-dominated profession even in this day and age. I strongly believe that science can have a huge impact on our lives and know from personal experience that if you have a dream and work hard, you can succeed. I appreciate every day how lucky I am to love the work I do, and I still have a dream to fulfil in my future: to retire to Mars.

*A learning difficulty that affects the skills involved in accurate and fluent reading and spelling.

*² Low-level classes for students unable to keep up with the work in the ordinary classes.

*³ An area of science which studies space.
